

Critical Race Theory, cont'd

agenda

- How some Americans are pushing back against CRT's "woke" programming

"Project 21's study of Critical Race Theory provides an expansive look into the toxicity of the race-centered indoctrination that has permeated American schools, corporations, federal agencies and even the military," said Project 21 member Stone Washington. "It dissects CRT's many lies - exposing its hideous Marxist-based philosophy that pits race against race, paints all white Americans as irredeemably racist and depicts black Americans as oppressed victims while branding society as having racism systemically intertwined in every aspect of societal relations."

The CRT primer doesn't simply complain about CRT - it also outlines several ideas to improve both the lives of black Americans and race relations generally. These include ending racist Davis-Bacon Act labor rules, embracing Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s opposition to group rights, agreeing that financial reparations for slavery would only increase discrimination and acknowledging that the Marxist underpinnings of CRT have been extremely harmful to minority groups around the world.

"Critical Race Theory is just the latest example of the soft racism of low expectations," said Donna Jackson, Project 21's director of membership development. "It assumes blacks are helpless victims incapable of competing on their own merit and overcoming obstacles. It is both false and damaging."

A downloadable PDF version of "What Critical Race Theory Means for Black America" is available through Project 21's website. Future topics to be covered by Project 21's "What It Means for Black America" series include environmental justice and election integrity.

New Study: Men Love Receiving Flowers More Than Women

With Valentine's Day around the corner, couples everywhere find themselves struggling to find the perfect gift for their partners. According to a new study by Savings.com, men are generally harder to buy Valentine's Day presents for even though men love traditional gifts more than women do. In fact, 47% of men love getting flowers compared to just 15% of women.

Balloons are the most hated gift to receive on Valentine's Day by both genders

77% of men expect to give gifts this Valentine's Day but only 42% expect to receive one back

Married couples are less likely to participate in Valentine's Day gift giving than unmarried couples in romantic relationships

Women also expect to receive more expensive gifts than men. Since 42% of men do not expect to get gifts during Valentine's day, it can be deduced that they find pleasure in receiving anything at all. Happy Valentine's Day, Monday, February 14, 2022!

The new study analyzed couples' habits for this Valentine's season and found the following:

Men's top three most loved gifts to receive are flowers (47%), chocolates (45%) and spa/massages (45%) compared to women whose favorites are chocolates/sweets(34%), sexy games/toys (23%) and jewelry (21%)
